

A guide to calculating affordability

Buy to let

Summary of the BTL affordability calculation

Barclays considers both personal and rental income within the BTL affordability assessment. The BTL income affordability assessment incorporates two simultaneous checks:

- A review of the borrower(s) current commitments to ensure that they are affordable (see 'Personal Solvency Review')
- A full affordability assessment of the borrower(s) (see 'Income Affordability Test')

To keep it simple, all you need to do in order to confirm client affordability prior to submitting your case is to complete the online BTL affordability calculator (new functionality allows you to download and save as a PDF)

BTL Affordability Calculator Outcomes

Affordable: if the case passes the personal solvency review, and the calculated net disposable income value is more than the required disposable income, then an 'Affordable' result will be returned.

Decline Re-model Allowed: if the case passes the personal solvency review, but the calculated net disposable income value is less than the required disposable income, a 'Decline Re-Model Allowed' result will be returned. The case can be re-modelled at a lower mortgage amount.

A maximum borrowing amount will also be returned, based on the inputs provided and using the calculated available disposable income.

A DR47 code will be generated in MAX.

Not Affordable: if the case fails the personal solvency review, a 'Not Affordable' result will be returned, irrespective of whether it passes the income affordability test.

A SD42 code will be generated in MAX.

Personal Solvency Review

A calculation is performed to assess whether the applicant(s) can afford their current commitments (excluding the applied for BTL).

A case will be declined if it fails the personal solvency review.

Income Affordability Test

At the same time, a detailed affordability assessment is performed and takes the following into account:

- Earned and rental income (capped at 75% (at individual applicant level), National Insurance payments and any tax liability associated with the BTL property (including mortgage interest tax relief)
- Credit commitments, including mortgages (existing and applied for BTL, existing residential mortgage(s)) and personal loans, motor finance and credit card balances. Mortgage payments are stressed to take account of likely future interest rate increases on affordability
- Borrower costs associated with renting out BTL properties
- Essential expenditure and living costs, calculated using statistical data appropriate to the composition of the borrower's household
- Other committed expenditure, such as school fees and maintenance

This tailored approach, based on a client's individual circumstances, means a minimum rental cover ratio is no longer required.
